

COUNTY CRICKET: SUNDRY EXTRAS

David Jeater

Many cricketers who have made a small contribution to the outcomes of County Championship cricket have special achievements to their names in other fields. Often, of course, they have had other, more worthwhile things to do with their lives. Perhaps we can think of them as the 'Sundry Extras' of county cricket.

The list below seeks to recognise the achievements of more than a thousand such cricketers in many areas of public life including fields administrative, commercial, cultural, judicial, military, political, professional and sporting.

It covers cricketers with United Kingdom residency who played in fewer than 100 matches in the 'official' County Championship between the start of the 1890 season and the end of the 2016 season, who no longer play high-level cricket, and who fall into one or more of the categories listed in the paragraph below.

They have:

- [a] played for England in a Test match;
- [b] been identified as cricketer of the year by Wisden, or as a young cricketer of the season by the Cricket Writers' Club;
- [c] been appointed a county captain in the Championship for more than one season;
- [d] an exceptional individual achievement to their name in Championship cricket;
- [e] held an important administrative position at national level in cricket;
- [f] played at national or international level in another sport;
- [g] umpired in 100 or more Championship matches;
- [h] other achievements in the public eye, including UK civilian or military honours;
- [i] been a director of a well-known business;
- [j] died while on active service.

The details provided for each player derive from a wide range of sources and comprise, where appropriate:

- [1] surname, forenames and well-used nicknames;
- [2] date and place of birth;
- [3] secondary schools and higher education institutions attended;
- [4] details of UK residence;
- [5] playing methods, as batsman, bowler and fielder;
- [6] details of counties represented in the Championship, seasons played, and playing status;
- [7] career record in the Championship, comprising matches played, runs scored and average, wickets taken and average, catches and stumpings made;
- [8] highest Championship score;
- [9] best innings bowling return in the Championship;
- [10] other cricket achievements, including Test appearances and Championship matches umpired;
- [11] major cricket or sports awards received;
- [12] close relatives who played Championship cricket;
- [13] achievements at national or international level in other sports;
- [14] other achievements in the public eye, including civilian and military honours;
- [15] an apposite comment or quotation;
- [16] date and place of death.

Further details about the entries can be seen in a note at the end of the list on page 130.

The list is an attempt at a comprehensive register of those meeting the qualifications set out above. The author would welcome additions to the list, and information leading to corrections to the existing entries, at davidjeater@yahoo.co.uk. He hopes that the list informs and entertains.

NOTES ON ENTRIES

[1] Names These comprise names in use, or formally available for use, by the player concerned during his Championship career. Details of relevant name changes are reported at the end of some entries. Nicknames are those which were apparently in regular use; traditional shortenings, such as 'Bill' for William, are omitted.

[2] and [16] Dates and places of birth and death Dates report month numbers in Roman numerals to aid readability. Placenames of birth or deaths in the British Isles comprise the name of a separate settlement [whether village, town or city] and its traditional or cricketing county name plus, outside England and Wales, the country concerned. In the four largest cities in the UK [Birmingham, Glasgow, London and Manchester] the names of individual suburbs, based on postcodes, are given. Placenames outside the British Isles comprise a village, town or city name, plus the appropriate territorial name [department, province or state] and country of the time. Outside England, modern [often de-Anglicised] placenames are used.

[3] Education School names, sometimes shortened, are those attended by the subject in his sixteenth year and onwards, whether or not they were well-known 'cricketing' schools. Where a school's 'title' omits a placename, a placename is also given. There is some under-recording of state and smaller private schools attended by players who were at school before about 1970. Higher education institutions are noted whether or not the player represented the establishment concerned at cricket. Further education institutions are omitted.

[4] UK residency To keep the compilation to a manageable length, it has not been possible to cover overseas players, i.e. those who never took up UK residency, or those who played cricket to a high level before taking up permanent residence in the UK. Where players were born outside the British Isles, or later left the UK to live elsewhere, the year of their entry to or exit from the country is given, where this can be established.

[5] Playing methods Batting positions and bowling methods are those generally occupied or employed by the player during his Championship career, rather than in his first-class career as a whole. Some batting positions are derived from sampling of Championship matches. The term 'middle-order' covers positions 3 to 7, 'lower-order' from 8 to 11. Fielding positions are necessarily generalised, and in any event are often unrecorded. In some cases, fielding positions have been found in histories, biographies and other publications. In the cases of a small number of young players who made very few catches, it has been deduced that as keen young men, just out of school and college, they were put into the outfield.

[6] Counties represented, seasons played and playing status To deal with players who made intermittent appearances, the entries report, in full, seasons when players made Championship appearances rather than simply first and last seasons as in many sources. For the purposes of the compilation, 1919 is the season immediately following 1914, and 1946 runs on from 1939. The status, amateur or professional, of players who appeared in Championship matches before the end of the 1962 season is reported as 'a' or 'p'. Players who captained their county for a significant number of matches during a season, without being formally appointed to the position, are noted as 'deputy-capt'.

[7] Playing statistics The figures given are for County Championship matches only, from the start of the official Championship in 1890 and onwards.

[8] Highest scores These are reported where they are for 50 runs or more.

[9] Best bowling returns These comprise the most wickets for the fewest runs and are reported where these involve taking four or more wickets in an innings.

[10] Other cricket achievements These include appearances in Test matches for England, and umpiring in 100 or more Championship matches. In a small number of cases, outstanding achievements in Championship cricket are reported. It is likely that future versions of the compilation will include coverage of limited-overs cricket. Many of the players in this list took part in county cricket before large numbers of limited-overs fixtures were played.

[11] Major cricket or sports awards These include players identified as cricketer of the year by Wisden from 1889 onwards, or as a young cricketer of the season by the Cricket Writers' Club from 1950. It also includes players winning the sports personality award run by BBC television from 1954, and players 'inducted' into the ICC Hall of Fame started in 2009.

[12] Close relatives These comprise only brothers and those in direct lineage who have played Championship cricket.

[13] Achievements in other sports Many Championship cricketers have played another sport to a good standard, though not necessarily to a national level. In individual sports, the entries report appearances in finals of national or international competitions and championships, or setting national records. In team sports, entries include in football and rugby league, playing for clubs in the top division of a national league or in the final of a national knock-out competition; in the case of amateurs, playing in 20 or more matches for Corinthians, or in amateur internationals; in hockey, entries include appearances in county matches, national trials or in international matches; in lacrosse, playing in regional teams or internationals; in rugby union, entries cover appearances for the leading 25 or so clubs of the time in UK, or elsewhere in territorial or international teams.

[14] Other achievements in the public eye These include players [a] who became holders of important positions in public services, including legislatures, judiciaries, executive bodies and the armed forces; [b] who became directors of companies listed on the London Stock-Exchange or having brandnames otherwise well-known by the public; [c] with recognisable achievements in art, broadcasting, design, music, the professions and writing to their names. In addition, entries report awards and appointments under the British honours system comprising [a] honours recognising merit in term of achievement and service; [b] decorations for specific deeds; [c] medals recognising bravery and long or valuable service and conduct. Some players have received honours from other countries, but these require more research and are omitted. The author is particularly grateful for help from various Association members in developing this part of each entry.

[15] Quotations These short extracts are drawn from a very wide range of sources, from Arthur Haygarth through to modern times, including cricket annuals and magazines as well as national newspapers, Who's Whos, biographies and a variety of cricket histories. A few derive from internet material, or from official sources. Wherever possible they are from sources contemporary with the subject's playing career, or from playing or spectating contemporaries. As can be seen, some quotations are anecdotal in character.

[16] Deaths Where players died before reaching fifty, the cause of death is reported where possible, but this is missing in some cases. Brief details are given where players lost their lives on active service.
